

How to Eat Bread Formally by Angel Fourlas

Hello, subjects. My name is Augustus Wilberforce. And in this lecture I will be showcasing how to eat bread formally.

Now one might think that an edible item such as bread wouldn't require any etiquette. And right there is where you are wrong, and for doing so you shall be excommunicated and shot forthwith. But, no matter, you are here to learn. There wouldn't be much fun talking to corpses now would there? Excellent, then!

We will commence our briefing after we take a good look at our tools. We have a knife a fork and a spoon. Could you possibly guess which out of the three silverware objects we shall be using?

If you said fork get out of the room. If you said knife, close the doors and windows of your house tonight, because I will be wielding one. But of course I'm joking, there is no need to close the windows, where will I dispose of the body when I'm finished? However, if you said spoon, congratulations, you get to be in one piece.

Right, so we have picked the correct cutlery item and we have a loaf in front of us. What do we do? Well, I am most glad you asked. First, we take the spoon and we hold it between our first and last finger like so. Then we calmly massage our loaf to loosen up the muscles, if you have any spear oil, even better.

After we have finished with massaging the bread, we take our elbow and we hit the bread so the muscles will harden once again. After we having finished wrestling with our bread, take the spoon and gently carve out its insides. After we disembowel our loaf of its vital organs, we are finally free to feast upon our trophy.

Bon Appetite! And see you again in the next lecture, where we will be discussing "Putting children to sleep".

The End